Chen Cheng-Po

Chen Cheng-Po (1895-1947, Taiwan) was the first Taiwanese painter to be selected to participate in Japan's Imperial Art Exhibition. He was also a pioneer in the development of modern art in Taiwan. From living in Taiwan, Japan, and China, Chen Cheng-Po accumulated a wealth of understanding regarding artistic creation and energy.

Chen Chih-Chi

Chen Chih-Chi (1906-1931, Taiwan) participated in the Taipei Normal University student protest of 1924, resulting in his expulsion from the university. Ishikawa Kinichiro advised Chen's family to send him to Japan, and in March of 1925, he passed the entrance exam for Tokyo School of Fine Arts, revealing his considerable talent. In 1928, Chen was selected for the Teiten (Imperial Academy of Fine Arts Exhibition) and also proposed the reorganization of the Seven Stars Artist Group as the Red Island Association, which held its first exhibition in 1929. In 1931, he was selected for the Imperial Academy of Fine Arts Exhibition. In 1932, Chen died at home at the young age of 25.

Chen Chin

Chen Chin (1907-1998, Taiwan) was the first Taiwanese female painter to achieve national fame and recognition. For her contributions to glue-on-silk paintings, her honest depictions of Taiwanese women's gradual evolution throughout a span of seventy-plus years, and her role in fostering a new generation of women artists, Chen was awarded the 16th National Cultural Award in 1996. She passed away two years later, at the age of 92.

Henrique Oliveira

The hybrid art of Henrique Oliveira (b.1973, Ourinhos, São Paulo, Brazil) evokes both the urban and the natural, the organic and the structural, as well as art and science through unexpected compositions tinted with the fantastic. Often using materials from the urban landscape such as found plywood, Oliveira's installations highlight the endemic nature of precarious urban occupation, functioning as a metaphor for organic growth and revealing the decay present in cosmopolitan cities.
